Rain on the Roof.

When the humid showers gather Over all the starry spheres, And the melancholy darkness Gently weeps in rainy tears, 'Tis a joy to press the pillow Of a cottage chamber bed, And to listen to the patter Of the soft rain overhead.

Every tinkle on the shingles Has an echo in the heart, And a thousand dreary fancies Into busy being start; And a thousand recollections Weave their bright hoes into woof, As I listen to the patter

Of the soft rain on the roof. There in fancy comes my mother, As she used in years agone, To survey the infant sleepers E e she left there till the dawn. I can see her bending o'er me, An I listen to the strain Which is played upon the shingles

By the patter of the rain. Then my little scraph sister. With her wings and waving hair, As a her bright-eyed chern's brother, A screne, angelie pair, Glide around my wakeful nillow

With their praise or mild reproof, As I listen to the murmar Of the soft rain on the roof. And another comes to thrill me With hereve's delicious blue; I forget, as gazing on her,

That her heart was all untrue; I remember that I loved her As I no'er may love again, And my hearn's quick polses vibrate To the patter of the rain.

There is nought in art's bravuras That can work with such a spell, In the spirit's pure, deep fountains, Whence the holy passion swell, As that melody of nature-That subdued, subdaing strain, Which is played upon the shingles By the patter of the rain.

We copy the following from an interesting letter in the Independent, by Rev.

H. W. Beecher : "As I approached the church, the churchyard was to be passed, and an avenue of lime trees meeting overhead, formed a beautiful way, and my soul exulted to go up thus to the house of God. The interior was stately and beautiful-it was to me, and I am not describing anything to you as it was, but am describing myself while in the presence of scenes with which you are familiar. As I sat down in a pew close by the reading desk and pulpit I looked along to the chancel, which stretched some fifty or sixty feet back of the pulpit and desk, and saw upon the wall, the well known bust of Shakspeare, and 1 knew that heneath the payement under that, his dust reposed.

"In a few minutes, a little fat man with a red collar and red cuffs, advanced from a side room behind the pulpit, and led the way for the Rector, a man derson, the actor, repeated to Dugald of about fifty-hald, except on the sides of his head, which were covered with portion of a new-paper, that the metawhite hair, I had been anxious lest physician thought it matvellous, "If was good.
